Some Quotes about Aging from George Burns

At my age flowers scare me.

I can remember when the air was clean and sex was dirty.

If you live to be one hundred, you've got it made. Very few people die past that age.

Retirement at sixty-five is ridiculous. When I was sixty-five I still had pimples.

When I was a boy the Dead Sea was only sick.

You can't help getting older, but you don't have to get old.

You know you're getting old when you stoop to tie your shoelaces and wonder what else you could do while you're down there.

Is 50 the "New 60"?

A baby born in 1950 in the United States had a life expectancy of about 70 years. That same baby born in 2009 has a life expectancy of about between 78 and 79 years.

Why then have so many producers in the Long-Term-Care field come to the conclusion that the chance of placing an application on a 50-year old today is roughly equivalent to placing a 60-year old 15 years ago?

The BOOMers who are now entering their 60's have managed through improper diet and by avoiding exercise to create a health problem that is causing the Long-Term-Care industry to blanch.

Some in that industry even suggest that the BOOMers have solved the social security crisis through their poor physical condition. Others suggest that BOOMers might live longer, but will spend more time in care facilities.

Most astute Long-Term-Care producers have adjusted their target age from the historic 60-65 age bracket to a much younger 45-50. They have found that those applicants in the early sixties can expect a decline rate in the 35-45% rate, while those in the 45-50 age bracket will have a much higher probability of acceptance.

Do people who are in the 45-50 age bracket consider themselves old enough to buy Long-Term-Care insurance? Consider this – eons, the Facebook for BOOMers, has dropped their age requirement to 45.
